

Dunder Mifflin Paper Company

Employee Benefits Policy

1. Health Insurance

Eligible full-time employees may enroll in the company's health insurance plan. New employees may enroll during their initial benefits enrollment window, which remains open for 30 days after their start date.

Employees who miss the initial enrollment window may enroll during the company's annual benefits enrollment period, subject to plan rules.

2. Retirement Savings

Employees may contribute to the company's retirement savings plan through payroll deductions.

Dunder Mifflin matches 50% of the first 6% of eligible employee contributions.

Employees may change their contribution percentage through the payroll benefits portal.

3. Learning and Development

Employees may request reimbursement of up to ₹20,000 per calendar year for approved job-related courses, certifications, or conferences.

The employee's manager must approve the request before the course or event is purchased.

Training that is mandatory for the employee's role is handled separately by the relevant department.

4. Employee Assistance

Dunder Mifflin provides confidential employee assistance services through an external provider. Employees may contact the provider directly without manager approval.

The service may provide support relating to personal, financial, or workplace concerns.

5. Cafeteria Benefit

Employees working from a Dunder Mifflin office may use the subsidized cafeteria benefit where a company cafeteria is available.

The cafeteria benefit is not available as a cash alternative.

6. Benefits Questions

Questions about health insurance, retirement savings, or benefits enrollment should be directed to the People Operations team. Questions about learning and development reimbursement should first be discussed with the employee's manager.
